

Ice festival at Khovsguul lake

Travel description:

The bear is dancing on the ice. A superlative ice festival in the north of Mongolia, not only in terms of temperatures. The ice festival of the nomads at Lake Khovsguul.

Normally they lead a lonely life in the grasslands and forests around Mongolia's largest lake. The temperatures are friendly - 45 ° C more than well below freezing. The water is hewn out of the lake in blocks. One sledge load is enough for four days. The next settlement is a good three riding days away. The days are short, the nights all the colder.

Only once in this harsh winter season, at the end of February, life changes for a short time in this region. Then the ice festival is celebrated. Not only nomads from the wider area come to the southern shore of the lake, but also relatives from the distant capital make the arduous journey to this unique festival.

The settlement, where people meet, counts just one ten wooden huts, most participants are more than 12 hours on the road to participate in the "winter games" of the nomads. The most important event is, of course, the horse race. For this race, the horses get extra "spikes" under their hooves, otherwise they wouldn't get ten meters on the glassy egg. The sumo wrestling is different, which looks very funny when the mighty sumo wrestlers have to pass the competition without "spikes". The same picture offers itself to the viewer with the traditional tug of war, where the teams come equal rows on the ice into sliding.

Shamans, who still have their firm place in the faith of the people in this area, draw their spiritual circles and dances around the competitors. Faith is an important component and also gladly replaces a good workout once in a while. Of course, the audience also appears in colorful costumes. Red, green and especially the sky-blue cloths of the nomads offer an interesting contrast to the glistening white of the snow and ice covered mountains around the lake.

It quickly gets dark in the evening. Then is the time of the big campfire. Dimly the ice sculptures, which were created during the day by the nomad families, are illuminated by the glow of the fire. Now is the time to also warm the body from the inside, not only with warm food.

The ice festival takes place every year at the beginning of March. The festival is reached by plane from the capital, then by four-wheel drive vehicle through the snow-covered landscape and finally several kilometers across the frozen Lake Khovsguul until the small settlement is built. Overnight is spent in cozy wooden huts, or in the amazingly chubby warm yurts. For the journey to the "warmly cold ice festival" one should take already one week with arrival and departure time..
